

THE EVENING STAR.
WASHINGTON.
THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1892.
CROSBY & NOYES, Editors.
The Evening Star has a regular and permanent circulation in Washington three times larger than that of any other paper in the city. As a local news paper and advertising medium it has no competitor.

As generally expected Senator Sherman has secured a re-nomination. His majority is large enough to gratify his friends and not so large as to discredit his opponents. While this distinguished leader of the republicans in the Senate was on all grounds compatible with a broad policy entitled to the additional honor he has received, it is fully admitted by his friends that his energetic opponent has never shown greater popular strength in his brilliant and somewhat checkered career. Senator Sherman will have been fifty years in the service of the United States as member of Congress and as a cabinet minister at the close of the term to which he has been chosen. In all the history of the republic there have been few such public careers of uninterrupted and high service. It is a service devoted to his state as well as to his country, but it is a service entirely apart from the state government. This is the singular fact. In the old days, when the republic was young, the giants among the country's public men were transferred, as a rule, from the state to the federal government as it was supposed their services were demanded in some particular emergency. And even now, when the general government overlaps the state government in the public mind and in the history of the times, many eminent in popular esteem are versed in both services. There is something more than an excuse for the fact that a man of such high ability and energy should be transferred to the federal government in the remark of ex-Gov. Foraker in his caucus speech after the nomination: "I was not aware at the start, as we have since come to know, that we had to fight not only the republicans of Ohio who were against us, but because it was grand old John Sherman on the other side it was the whole United States against us."

From the cold, cheerless "roof of the world" - Pamir - that is giving such trouble to the English, Russians and Chinese in diplomacy - to the alleged lost continent of Limuria, in the Indian Ocean, the speculations as to the seat of Paradise have been varied, ranging from the foot of the globe flat, to high hills, on the testimony of Moses in Genesis, than 45 feet. Then the flood came and with it such an upheaval of mountain ranges and a new arrangement of seas, islands, continents and grand divisions of the earth. The Limurian theory stands on other evidence. It is based on the fact that the further into the subject of Paradise The Star refers, in conclusion, to some discoveries which the learned professor of Assyriology at the University of Munich, Dr. Fritz Hommel, has wrought into a new theory of the site of Eden. From an examination of the geography of the Euphrates and Tigris, and the discovery of the traveler Gilgamesh, and the traditions of the people of Mesopotamia, he has concluded that the seat of Paradise was located on the Persian Gulf in the vicinity of the mouth of the Euphrates and Tigris. Platon and Gilgamesh are identified with two extinct rivers which once flowed out from central Arabia.

In one respect at least the outcome of the election for a new republican central committee of the District may be regarded as satisfactory. Each faction will flock by itself and the noise and disorder which were almost certain to follow the meeting together may be avoided. Paradoxical as it may seem, peace and good order may result from the infirmity in the ranks of the local republicans, though no one can tell what subdivisions may yet be formed within the lines of each faction.

Race feeling must be high in Russia when Germans are fanatically killed, as reported, Helvetic expelled and threats made to repress the Finnish national spirit and institutions. Your Slavonian is now the greatest autocrat on earth. It is, perhaps, because he woke up later in the historical day and thinks it is his destiny to supplant all the other national movements.

The governor of Maryland devotes the bulk of his bulky message to finances, especially to taxes. The governor says that a large saving in finance has been effected and he recommends a lower tax rate. An extension of the Australian modified ballot law to all the counties of the state is a good suggestion. The governor disavows responsibility for Treasurer Archer's defection.

Does Chairman Wilson mean by having a session here on January 20 of the executive committee of the National Association of Democratic Clubs to reinforce the cause of tariff reform in the present Congress? Tariff reform is the specialty of the clubs, whereas they do say that it is not the principal interest of the democratic managers in the Fifty-second Congress - at least not until after next November.

As evidence of the purity of blue grass politics, Kentuckians are proudly pointing to the fact that members of the legislature are paying for their own whisky and cigars. The test is indeed a practical one, but it may be that the members are not to be influenced by the demands of the more Kentucky necessities of life.

A minister who claims to have foretold the Johnston flood is predicting more disaster. He should quit prophesying while his laurels are fresh. One long-range guess of that kind is all that can be true in the average lifetime.

There seems to be absolutely no way to prevent John Chinaman from getting the best of this country. The exclusion of the Celestials has made the wages of Chinese servants so high that California housekeepers are in despair.

Had the starvation plague been ravaging Ireland instead of Russia the House of Representatives might have done differently yesterday. Congressional sympathy and votes are closely related.

The opening of the Corcoran Art Gallery every Friday night is a step toward providing the people of Washington with elevating occupation for leisure hours. A free library should be the next.

A recent visit by the Chinese minister to a New Haven manufactory of repeating arms would suggest that "John" has at last been getting his gun.

Has Senator Stewart's views on silver coinage changed? - Louisville Courier Journal. It is the general belief that they have not.

There can be no constitutional objections, at any rate, to private benefactions for the relief of the starving Russians.

New York's undertaking to clean out the dives of that city appears to be in the nature of a steady craft.

The modern form of homicidal mania is directed against millionaires instead of statesmen as formerly.

The grip is not to be prophesied by the application of the more high sounding title "La Grippe."
